Another crop which has recently been introduced to Minnesota and which is being favorably received by farmers, is soybeans. Its many uses for industrial purposes make it a popular crop. Groom Speaks On "Farm Problem"

Kiwanians Hear Agricultural Expert

At the regular Thursday luncheon of the Moorhead Kiwanis club today, B. E. Groom, chairman of the agricultural committee of the Greater North Dakota association, discussed the farm problem, its future, and possible solutions.

Mr. Groom told of a national meeting of farmers and farm leaders which he attended last year at Dayton, O. He compared farming in the east with farming here, saying that the AAA operates to a disadvantage here as compared with the east.

There, he said, every acre is utilized. Some crop is planted on all available land, and crops are rotated in a way which is not possible here.

Mr. Groom recommended, for this part of the country, the planting of more sugar beets. Last year, about eight million acres in this country were planted to sugar beets, while this year the acreage was reduced by a million, with about seven million acres being planted to that crop.

The fuhrer pointed out that France had been left in undistrusted possession of her overseas empire on the belief that she would make up her mind to strike the bargain but that the sands were running out very quickly and that a final decision could not be delayed much longer.

Hitler's concluding words were that it rested with the Vichy government to make its choice.

Were the German offer to be rejected, Franco-German relations would be brought back where they stood last summer, France would be treated as a vanquished country. Needless to add that the disappointment suffered in Russia by the Reichswahr rendered German pressure all the more drastic.

Before casting the die, last week, Marshall Petain asked Darlan to visit once more the German representatives in Paris and ascertain what alleviation would be conceded, in the terms of the armistice under the contemplated agreement with regard to the relaxation of the internal frontier, the re-establishment of administrative unity and the freeing of war prisoners.

The results achieved in that respect by the French negotiator are not known, except that, of late, the release of several hundred naval officers, including two admirals and of several thousand sailors captured in Cherbourg and Brest was seriously discussed last month.

For nearly ten months, General Maxime Weygand has been regarded by many as the active force which, eventually, might keep the French African territories closed lock, stock and barrel, against all German attempts to involve them in the war with England.

With that in mind, as the result of an arrangement concluded toward the end of June, supplies are being shipped to Weygand from this country. However, friends of his who approached him as recently as last spring, always questioned the foundation upon which such hopes were built.

The true obstacle in the path of the Petain-Darlan policy of cooperation with Germany is the popular feeling which runs all over France against the nazi conqueror and reacts more strongly than ever today under the impact of Russian resistance to the prospects of an allied victory.

the United States to help shape a "better world" after aiding in the overthrow of nazism was seen by British sources today as a result of the meeting of President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Winston Churchill at sea.

British circles also took the position that Point eight in the joint British-American statement implied that the United States would be prepared, after world disarmament, to join in aiding whatever system might be set up for policing the world.

Points six and eight in the joint declaration—concerning post-war aims and policy—were regarded here as most significant, but it also was pointed out that the statement indirectly suggested an offer for Japan to abandon aggressive tactics in return for a promise of open world markets.

The various points, in order of importance, were compared to Woodrow Wilson's famous 14 points but it was believed that certain aspects of the declaration would be sharply criticized in liberal circles here.

Some quarters offered the opinion that the Roosevelt-Churchill meeting undoubtedly would concentrate the growing popular feeling among people of the United Kingdom that the center of gravity of the English-speaking world has shifted to the United States.

They felt that this development would meet with widespread approval of the common Britisher.

The average Briton is expected to regard this as a natural development in the course of events, reflecting the conviction that has grown in this country in the past six months that some sort of permanent political alignment with the United States is indispensable after the war.
