THE ELIJAH WILL BE GIVEN AT 8:15

ORATORIO EFFECTIVELY DRAMATIZED BY CONCORDIA COLLEGE CHORUS.

By CRANE ROSENBAUM At 8:15 p. m. today in Moorhead senior high school, this community will have its last chance to hear the Concordia chorus in what may well be this season's most noteworthy local musical event.

It is a story-in-song of miracles, of prophecy, of the wrath of God and of deliverance from death as written in the Old Testament, set to music by Mendelssohn, and sung by Lois Anderson, Earl Berg, Edna Mae Smith and some 80 others.

Compared with most of Handel's Messiah, the music of this oratorio, 'The Elijah,' is as unfamiliar, except for parts like Lift Thine Eyes, as its story is familiar.

The reasons for the effectiveness of 'The Elijah' are many. First it is based on what is recognized would be great literature, even were all theological and historical aspects removed, that was learned so early in most of our lives that we feel it has the reality of something we actually saw, long ago.

Then the oratorio has the name of a great composer written on its title page. It is a cohesive, dramatic unity, envisioned in its creator's mind as a whole rather than a series of disconnected songs in varied moods. The plot is neither strained nor obtrusive and the music doesn't have to stop and wait while the story catches up with it.

Moreover the Concordia chorus has made something so amazingly dramatic of 'The Elijah' that the term oratorio, reminiscent of stiff fronts of formals and white shirt frons singing The Messiah, might well be replaced by "musicdrama."

I'm spelling that without the hyphen. The vigor of the opening scene with the entire chorus will not easily be forgotten. Neither will the dramatic silence as the priests of Baal vainly seek a sign from their God, nor the flash of flame that bursts from the altar at which Elijah prays.

Scenery, costumes and acting are present to the exact degree required. Mass movements are carried through with precision.

From where, one asked himself, came the power and vigor and all-around excellence of the program? Partly it may be due to the spirit of a denominational college brings to something which is largely a religious presentation.

Certainly Director Clara Dues and dramatic directors Doris Kretzschmar, Frida Nilsson had a great part in the performance's excellence.

More than that, I think, it is due to the painstaking thoroughness that Concordia shows in events musical—a thoroughness that extended last night from the singing down to such things as the very programs themselves.

Homemakers' Nutrition Project Proves Success

Clay County Groups Hold Annual Check-Up Day At Baker Community Hall; 23 Additional Rural Schools Now Serving Hot Lunches.

First year of the nutrition project for Clay county Homemakers has been highly successful, leaders throughout the county reported at the annual check-up held today at the Baker community hall.

The project, in which there were 623 women enrolled, has been highly beneficial in increasing health conditions in the family and in the rural schools, a survey of the year's work showed.

Forty-six Homemakers groups participated in the work. Lessons were prepared and taught by Miss Inez Hobart, nutrition specialist from the University of Minnesota farm school, and Miss Margaret Opp, home demonstration agent, to the 92 group leaders—two to each group—in the county. These leaders then carried on instruction in the various groups.

One of the biggest accomplishments of the project was the establishment of the practice of serving hot lunches in 23 additional rural Clay county schools attended by 644 pupils.

The Middletown group of Georgetown reported, "There have been fewer colds than usual among members of the local families, and we are crediting it to resistance built up through better food habits."

In the Riverside group families reported doubling milk consumption and producing and using more home grown food.

One of the county Homemakers, financially unable to buy much fresh fruit and vegetables, said that the health of her family had been improved by using more milk, whole grain cereal and dried fruit.

Other groups reported valuable lessons learned in child care and nutrition, vitamins, exercising to reduce excess weight and general health.

The experience of the Kurtz group is typical of the problem encountered in many rural schools in regard to the noon lunch hour. The report of this group stated that for about 15 years, children attending the Rustad school had eaten only cold lunches at noon, with cold water afterwards. The pupils ate in the basement sitting on hard benches placed along the wall.

Leaders of the Kurtz group, after a Homemaker meeting in Moorhead last fall, decided to remedy the situation after discussing it with members of the group. The "pint jar" method was selected as the most economical way to start the project. An oil stove was available in the school and the Homemakers had a container with a rack large enough to cover the three burners, which was placed in the school. Now mothers prepare hot dishes for their children every day. These are collected, placed in the container to heat and at noon the pupils get a hot lunch. Similar experiences have been reported in other parts of the county.

WILLKIE, KNUDSEN ATTACK NEW DEAL

PUBLISHERS TOLD RESTRICTIONS ARE OBSTACLE TO PROSPERITY.

New York, April 26 (UP)—William S. Knudsen and Wendell L. Willkie told the American Newspaper Publishers association last night that new deal restrictions were the only obstacle to prosperity in the United States.

The country's inventors, investors and business administrators, "if released from governments restrictions, can provide jobs enough to restore prosperity in America," Willkie said.

And, said Knudsen, if business is given encouragement "rather than constant scolding," the United States will maintain "for many more generations to come" its record of producing the things "that spell progress and higher standards of living."

Knudsen added that he looked "forward to a victory for democracy (in Europe), or economic and political discipline by consent, rather than by force as in totalitarian states."

Willkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern corporation, and Knudsen, president of General Motors corporation, spoke at the annual banquet of the A. N. P. A.'s bureau of advertising.
